

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

the fact that they are small, but from the much more impressive fact that they will not stay so, and he expressed the conviction that there is no museum in this country, no matter how small the community in which it stands, nor how discouraging its present outlook, that will not outgrow its present confines. Two pieces of advice followed which should be printed large and well conned: First, "Keep your standard high. Better a small room with one picture of distinction than a large gallery filled with mediocrities. The one picture is what will give your museum a high reputation in this and in other lands, and what will bring you the respect of your fellow-citizens and their desire to help." Second, "Consider the special needs, and the special character, of the community in which your museum is to be situated." In a community where textiles are manufactured, Mr. Robinson suggested that material that would help the designers of patterns and illustrate the history of the art in which many were engaged would do more good than a mere exhibition of the abstract forms of art. As an instance proving the value and importance of individuality in the development of art museums, Mr. Robinson cited the industrial art museums of Germany, each of which excels in some particular line and hence attracts, not only resident townsmen, but persons from distant places. By this theory of development each museum may become individual, important, unique, whereas, on the other hand, developing along conventional lines, there is little hope of accomplishment for the majority beyond the area of mediocrity.

In other words, henceforth art museums must be institutions for the people, not merely treasure houses, nor places of esthetic enjoyment, but factors in the betterment of industry as well as the betterment of man; educational institutions, no less forceful, no less essential, than the public library and the public school. To accomplish this end our museums must have, however, not only ample support, but capable direction.

NOTES

ART MUSEUMS IN SOUTH AMERICA

On page 1056 of this number of ART AND PROGRESS will be found a picture of the Museum of Fine Arts erected comparatively recently in Santiago, Chile; a handsome dignified building in which a notable group of paintings by American artists was exhibited at the close of the Exposition in Buenos Aires.

South America is just beginning to be reckoned among those countries whose interest in art is vital, and many persons will therefore be surprised to learn that already museums of art, several under direct government patronage, have been established in Brazil, Bolivia, Argentina, Ecuador, Peru, Uruguay, Venezuela and Colombia. A list of twelve such museums has been secured through the courtesy of the Pan American Union. It is understood, however, that this list does not include all the art collections in South America.

Because the stream of travel has only lately turned toward South America our knowledge of this great continent is still comparatively meager and crude. Buenos Aires in Argentina is, however, one of the most beautiful cities in the world and can boast many notable examples of fine architecture.

Looking to the future there is reason to believe the nations of South America may take their places before long among the art loving countries of the world, and that from them may come not only wise patronage but notable production in the field of the fine arts.

MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS, BOSTON

The Registry of Local Art, started some time ago by the Museum of Fine Arts of Boston, has proved a successful experiment and of increasing value. In 1911 and 1912 the list of city monuments and city pictures was compiled. To this has been added during the past year an inventory of busts and bas-reliefs. In the course of preparing this list the Registry has made a list of plaster reproductions of sculpture preserved in city buildings. These are mostly in the schools, of whose plastic ornamentation the list forms an interesting census. One hundred and one schools are so decorated out of a total number of more than three hundred in Boston. "The sources," to quote from the Museum's Bulletin, "are many: graduating classes, school societies, local clubs, individuals—sometimes in memory of others, sometimes by legacy—teachers, parents, proceeds of entertainments and lectures, money earned by pupils, and contributions from leagues and other organizations. Such an inventory testifies in a striking way to the place held by the schools in popular esteem. As in the case of all permanent installations of fine art, often placed in position to be unheeded thereafter, the question of the use of the pupils of this material is as important as that of its provision. It has taken the efforts of many to bring these objects together, and may require still further effort before they are enjoyed as they might be."

CONTEMPORARY
SPANISH PAINTINGS

From May 15th to June 11th a notable exhibition of paintings by contemporary Spanish artists was held in the Art Institute of Chicago. This comprised sixty-five canvases representing the works of painters of the several Spanish schools. These schools divide themselves into four groups: the first headed by Villegas, Director of the Prado; the second, by Sorolla; the third, by Zuloaga, and the fourth, by the two Zubiaurre. The collection was assembled in Madrid by Miss Ethel L. Coe, a student and teacher of the Art Institute who was invited by Sorolla to visit Madrid to study with him. An admirable introduction to the catalogue, giving an outline of contemporary painting in Spain, has been compiled from Miss Coe's notes, and the exhibition while not exhaustive has been pronounced thoroughly representative. Reproductions of some of the paintings shown therein will be published in a later number of ART AND PROGRESS.

PHILADEL-PHIA'S NEW MUSEUM

Plans for a great Art Museum for Philadelphia, to be erected in Fairmount Park on the site of the old reservoir, have recently been completed and published. They are by Horace Trumbauer, C. C. Zantzinger and C. L. Berie, Jr. The proposed structure will stand upon a terrace 46 feet in height and will have a façade 400 feet long. It will overlook the Schuylkill River and the park, standing at one end of the splendid new parkway which terminates at its further end in the City Hall. It will thus have both isolation and monumental dignity. The style is described as Greek with Renaissance detail, "noble in simplicity, classic in outline, spacious in content and in accord with its situation."

The portion of the building which is to be immediately erected will cost, it is estimated, about $3,000,000. With its future extensions this museum as planned will exceed by two thousand square feet the area of the Louvre in Paris.

NEWS ITEMS

Mr. Harold Haven Brown, of Chicago, has been appointed Director of the John Herron Art Institute in Indianapolis succeeding Mr. F. Allen Whiting, who in May became the Director of the new museum now in course of erection in Cleveland, Ohio.

In the July number of Scribner's magazine is published an article by Elmer Grey on the Panama-Pacific Exposition, in which the architecture, sculpture and landscape gardening planned for this approaching World's Fair are graphically described.

Among the more notable works in sculpture recently unveiled are a memorial to Carl Schurz, by Karl Bitter, erected in New York City, and a memorial to Kit Carsen, by Augustus Lukeman and F. G. R. Roth, erected in Trinidad, Colorado.